Continuation of 3 NOTE:

Response to Amendment:

The modification of Claim 23 would change the scope of the claim, which would require further consideration/search.

Response to Arguments:

- 1. The Applicant argues that Higashi et al. fails to describe an organic EL device comprising a phosphorescent light-emitting layer and proceeds to attack the individual references of Begley et al. and Hu et al. separately on pages 12-13. In response to applicant's arguments against the references individually, one cannot show nonobviousness by attacking references individually where the rejections are based on combinations of references. See In re Keller, 642 F.2d 413, 208 USPQ 871 (CCPA 1981); In re Merck & Co., 800 F.2d 1091, 231 USPQ 375 (Fed. Cir. 1986).
- 2. In response to the Applicant's showing of unexpected results as described on pages 14-15, it is the position of the Examiner that the data is insufficient to render the invention novel over the combined prior art. The Applicant's comparison of lifetimes data with that of Higashi et al. is not applicable since differences exist between the two devices including that the device as disclosed by Higashi et al. is a fluorescent organic EL element and the fact that its impurity concentrations are not specified. Moreover, it is the position of the Examiner that the due to the widespread use of phosphorescent dopants in organic EL elements as disclosed by Begion at al. in addition to the fact that Higashi et al. clearly identifies the desirability of having halogen concentrations as low as possible including 0 ppm (col. 1, lines 52-60; col. 2, lines 17-22) in order to maximize luminesce efficiency, one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention could have been motivated to produce the claimed invention.
